In Tule canyon the mineralization extends for over two miles and values of astounding magnitudes are found wherever tests have been made. The main shaft on the Ingalls group is sinking in a ledge that carries an average value of $120 divided in $66 silver and $54 gold while selected samples run $155. On the Jagers a shallow shaft shows a ledge 8 feet wide that averaged $40.

"We are not so desirous about publicity so much as to satisfy ourselves that the Silver Hills and the Silver Hills Extension are meritorious propositions and we are going about the work of development to prove to our own satisfaction that everything is as good as it appears. At the Ingalls shaft we are going ahead with the erection of the first unit of 10 stamps close to the shaft where it appears more economical to pump water rather than carry the ore to the mill, a distance of 2800 feet with a lift of only 150 feet. There is an abundance of water for all future purposes. At this unit we will (Continued on page four)

M'KINNON OUT OF THE PEN

Hector D. McKinnon has been granted another parole by the state board of pardons. There was no time limit fixed when final action was taken under the date of May 25th, the only condition being that McKinnon keep out of Mineral county says the Carson City Appeal.

This action came as something of a surprise, as it was thought in some quarters that the patience of the members of the board had been tried to the point that they would give McKinnon's case no further consideration. It is understood that he did not comply with conditions requiring a daily report, and that he did not present himself to the warden or board at the expiration of the various parole extensions. Further, although it was clearly understood that McKinnon would pay the expense of the guard provided while he was in Mineral county, he refused to do so when presented with a bill for $87.50. The attorney general has taken steps to recover this amount for the state by levying upon McKinnon's automobile.

McKinnon attempted to do some shooting in a combination saloon and eating house in Mineral county, but no one was harmed as the pistol did not work and the man was disarmed. He was tried on the charge of assault and April 2, 1917, was convicted in the second degree and given a sentence of one to two years. Later he was granted a new trial. In January, 1918, he was again convicted, this time in the first degree. The sentence imposed was one to fourteen years. None of the time served under the first sentence applied on the second.
